Cultural Mapping as Cultural Inquiry

Edited by Nancy Duxbury, Will Garrett-Petts and David MacLennan

Series: Routledge Advances in Research Methods

This edited collection provides an introduction to the emerging and interdisciplinary field of cultural mapping, making a case for and demonstrating the spatial turn emerging in many related areas of critical, social and artistic research. The contributors explore innovative ways to encourage artistic intervention and public participation in cultural mapping—recognizing that artistic practices and public involvement introduce a range of challenges spanning various phases of the research process, from the gathering of data, to interpreting data, to presenting “findings” to a broad range of audiences. Toward these ends, the collection explores the international scope of conventional and alternative approaches to mapping cultures and communities.
