WELCOME TO IABA EUROPE 2025

On behalf of the IABA Coimbra Organizing Committee, I would like to welcome you to our 8th IABA Europe Conference. The first IABA Europe took place in Amsterdam in 2009, followed by succeeding editions in Tallin (2011), Vienna (2013), Funchal/Madeira (2015), London (2017), Madrid (2019), and Warsaw (2023).

The theme of our 2025 conference, Life Writing and Social Transformation, envisions life-writing practices as multi-modal anthropological tools capable of fostering individual and collective awareness. The world is facing dramatic challenges related to armed conflicts, the global economic system, geopolitical tensions, environmental crisis, humanitarian crisis, technological threats to ethics in communication, spread of misinformation, populisms, hate discourses and actions, polarization, hardening life in society, human (co)existence, and mutual understandings. In this context, we wish to debate life-writing studies and practices as interdisciplinary and trans professional platforms for deeper reflections, analysis, and actions towards an ethics of responsibility and social transformation. Also, for the first time, we have opened the Conference call for papers to southern European languages, thus bringing together different schools of thought and theoretical traditions in the larger scope of biographical research and training. This openness brought to the IABA Coimbra edition colleagues from all continents of the world, presenting in English, French, Spanish, and Portuguese.

IABA Europe 2025 Conference reunites in Coimbra more than 200 participants from 31 countries: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, China, the Czech Republic, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Iceland, India, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Latvia, Lithuania, Mexico, the Netherlands, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Romania, South-Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Taiwan, the United Kingdom, and the USA. It is our great pleasure and honor to welcome you all. Enjoy our conference!

→ IABA – THE INTERNATIONAL AUTO|BIOGRAPHY ASSOCIATION ↓

The International Auto|Biography Association (IABA) is an interdisciplinary international group founded in 1999 to create a way for researchers and cultural producers in the field of biography, autobiography and life writing to share their work. IABA is a way for scholars around the world to attend biennial world and regional conferences in this field; connect to each other through the IABA-L listserve; create collaborative publications and projects; find and support publication venues, networks and research dedicated to life writing. Since 2000, members of IABA have run an international conference every two years all over the world.

IABA does not have a formal membership process. It has a free listserv that informs its members about upcoming conferences, publications, and other events connected to the study of autobiography, life writing and biography. IABA is maintained by an informal executive group of senior scholars, most of whom have run a IABA conference or event. IABA also has a close relationship with key academic journals.

IABA has several chapters working in articulation with the biannual IABA World conference and that hold their own events: IABA Europe, IABA Americas, IABA Africa, and IABA Asia-Pacific. There is also a SNS Network for graduate students and new scholars willing to discuss issues in the field of biography studies.

We are pleased to announce the 8th IABA Europe Conference held at the Faculty of Arts and Humanities, University of Coimbra, in partnership with the Centre for Social Studies, 23–26 July 2025. We have invited proposals for individual papers and panels of 3–4 papers, as well as round-table suggestions on the theme of the Conference: “Life Writing and Social Transformation”. The CPF was a success, we got around 250 proposals, having selected 150 papers and 16 panels. Most presentations will be in English, but we have also accepted talks in Portuguese, French, and Spanish, to open-up our dialogues to roman languages and southern european biographical studies.

The conference topic is rooted in the fact that individual lives and lived experiences have a major impact on the understandings of the social world. In this equation, life writing practices are at the heart of the relationship between individuals and society, and through it, individuals both discover and might impact on social structures. Significant changes worldwide have brought an increased attention to people’s lives, situated knowledges, and first-hand testimonials, but the uses and understandings of life writing and life reading vary across different cultures and geographies. The mosaic of these practices and studies calls for a dialogue with social life and social transformation, concerning both their origins and consequences. The expression and representation of life is about the subjective experience of reflecting and sharing lived events through narratives (here understood in a large sense), and about the objective gesture/capacity to write (in a large sense) one’s own life experiences and perceptions. There are conditions for such an exercise, that vary for different people according to their generation, gender, geography, culture, life situation, skills, social class, education, etc., and there are broader social contexts that promote and benefit from those expressions and ideographic presentations. Against this backdrop, several questions come to the fore: How is life writing an instrument for social change, specifcally? How new social contexts impact on our way of writing about lives (for example, are social networks a new space with impact on self-writing?). How the new technological and historical contexts of experience affect the repertoires of writing life? What are the empirical, processual, theoretical, epistemological preoccupations that we need to address for the study of the relationship between life writing and social change? What are the social causes and consequences of practices of life writing and reading?

By taking into consideration social inequalities, cultural and linguistic diversity, political claims, past, present, and future temporalities and projections, technological innovation, the ethics of civic responsibility, forms of horizontal communication, democratization of education, transdisciplinarity, and transprofessionalism, we are looking for papers that can contribute to the discussion on how lives and life writing can be addressed and examined in light of social transformation. Themes and issues include, but are not limited to: Life writing and life reading literacies; Forms and genres of life writing across cultures; Life writing and social vulnerability; Auto/biography publics and concerns; Synergies of life writing practices in community; The self, the other, and creativity; Environmental issues and personal experiences; Theorising lives and social change; The social process of life writing; Testimonial and social responsibility; Technologies of the self and new technologies; Creating theoretical-practical coherences through life writing.

During the IABA Coimbra Conference we will launch a Lusophone biographical studies network, and honour the contribution of colleagues like Gaston Pineau to such transcontinental and interdisciplinary dialogue.

GASTON PINEAU

Social transformations and transdisciplinary developments of the biographical paradigm. Historical and contemporary milestones.

The multimedia revolution is taken as a major social transformation leading to 1- a diversification of the names of the productions and associations of the inherited biographical paradigm: autobiography, life narrative, life story; 2- a democratization of the expressions of lives: from notable lives to lives in struggles for survival; 3- and even the emergence of ecobiographies with the current ecological crisis. Only the word life remains common and links these terminological evolutions which are taken as indicators/operators of a generalized, transdisciplinary bio-questioning.

This transdisciplinary bio-questioning is explored from two hundred books in a life history collection in formation, with two sides: narrative and hermeneutics. The first collects the direct accounts of actors seeking to become authors of themselves; the second brings together conceptual questions seeking to understand these stories more formally. I will focus on four main sectors of this transdisciplinarity bio-questioning: 1-Eight critical vital areas emerge from these recounted and conceptually reflected life paths. 2-An understanding of life as relations between organisms and environments takes us out of a purely organic vision. 3- An interactive life story methodology is forged with a support function. 4-And a common purpose emerges: to exist socio-personally and cosmically in its own right in a cosmodern Anthropocene world.

Writing the Wounded Self: Transatlantic Illness Narratives as Catalysts for Social Transformation

This talk surveys two autopathographies written in two different continents -Lucy Grealy's Autobiography of a Face (US, 1994), and Sergio del Molino's La Piel (Spain, 2020)- to show how life writing grounded in embodied illness transcends national borders to upset dominant ideals of beauty, health, care, and identity. By juxtaposing U.S. and Spanish voices and including works written by a man and a woman, this talk highlights the convergences and divergences in critical approaches to illness narratives.

Drawing upon various approaches to (Critical) Medical Humanities, I shall trace how each author negotiates shame, pain, stigma, isolation, and resilience, revealing the radical potential of life writing to re-inscribe the ill body as both subject and catalyst for social and medical change.

By tracing this transatlantic dialogue, this talk underscores how illness narratives enact social transformation: they invite readers to witness embodied suffering, contest prevailing paradigms of normalcy, and co-create new autobiographical pacts in which the wounded self becomes both subject and agent of change. In doing so, they chart a richly comparative map of how life writing can bridge continents and cultures in the pursuit of collective empathy and social justice.

An auto-biographical wave. 27 years of history of the Free University of Anghiari (LUA)

In this communication, I present the case of the Free University of Autobiography of Anghiari (LUA), an association founded in 1998 in Italy to launch the first training school in autobiographical methodology, 1999-2000. Initially conceived as an experimental course, it has, after 27 years, become a unique institution at both the national and international levels.

In the heart of Tuscany, among the hills surrounding the medieval village of Anghiari, a rare and valuable form of knowledge has been cultivated for over twenty-five years: that of autobiography as a path to self-knowledge, healing, and transformation. The Libera Università dell'Autobiografia di Anghiari (LUA) is a community devoted to the study and practice of life writing. It has become a national and international point of reference for those who seek to explore autobiographical writing in educational, formative, therapeutic, and social contexts, as well as for the study, research, and dissemination of autobiographical culture.

LUA's educational activities are centered on autobiographical writing as a tool for both personal and collective awareness, placing the individuals as the narrators of their own existence. In an age dominated by speed, fragmentation, and forgetfulness, the invitation to pause, remember, and write becomes an act of resistance. Autobiographical writing is therefore not merely a technique, but a journey of personal and cultural exploration – a way to reconcile with one's own story and to rediscover meaning in the passage of time.

I had the honor of being part of the first group of experts trained at LUA's School in 1999-2000, having completed the first two-year course. Over all these years, I have grown personally, but above all professionally, alongside LUA, participating in specialized training courses and research while also designing and organizing educational and autobiographical research interventions. A parallel process of growth alongside LUA.

Today, I am involved in the coordination of advanced training courses, I am a member of both the board of directors and the academic board, coordinating the projects, research area, and managing institutional relationships with universities. I also serve as the editor-in-chief of the journal Autobiografie, and... most of all, I am still always in training.

LUÍS ALCOFORADO

Life Stories: reflections on the current relevance of an epistemology of adult education committed to personal and social transformation

In the last decade of the 20th century, several authors expressed hope in a (still) emerging movement that could constitute a (new?) epistemology of education. The argument was very robust. On the one hand, it was easy to demonstrate that processes of change in adults did not result solely from external knowledge and specific learning, but were mostly associated with a broad knowledge of one's own characteristics, available resources, and a critical reflection on life contexts. On the other hand, the predominant schools of thought throughout the second half of that century led us to understand each of us as a subject of self-construction, or even as an agent of transformation of our lived reality. This presentation will provide a brief review of the theoretical principles that helped shape this epistemology of adult education, reflecting on the path taken and proposing their use in the service of a pedagogy of responsibility (always) committed to personal and social transformation through life narrative work.
